Season's Greetings from the Great #8

Season's greetings from the greatest mind and physical ability to ever grace the sport of American Football. Let's recap, shall we. My coaches were horrible this past year and it's why I was delighted to see each and every one of them walk out the doors of the Jets facilities. Honestly, I'm doing Woody a solid, helping him open his eyes to the cracks in this organization. Some people just were not focused on winning football games in this organization. I was great and continue to bring my greatness to New Jersey. It's been great being back on the field this year after that Achilles tear. It was an injury that required the advancement of modern medicine. Infectious disease is entirely different, it's been around a lot longer and herd immunity is real. The government does not want you to know about the wonders of Ivermectin; and most ailments can be cured with ayahuasca and some crystals. I'm looking forward to a righting of this system that we call healthcare, or should I call it sick-care, under my good friend Robert F. Kennedy Jr. as he leads the Department of Health and Human (possibly aliens too!) Services. You know I would have been Vice President elect should I have hung up the cleats and focused my attention on the political landscape and election of 2024.

2024 was a year of vulnerability for me. I had a lot of expectations to live up to. I think I did that leading this team to a 3-10 record. I helped bring a lot of talent to this organization from the last team I was on; a team that did NOT give me the tools I needed to win football games. I'll be featured in a forthcoming Netflix documentary–Aaron Rodgers: Enigma. Maybe you'll even sit around the Christmas tree and watch it with your family. That is if you find any value in your family. I certainly don't. Leeches.

As for 2025, a lot of people have been asking if I'm returning for my 21st season. I'll let you, my closest friends–screw my family, in on those plans. I haven't decided yet. When and only when Woody Johnson decides to wash my feet and praise me and my 4 MVP titles, will I end my holdout, but NOT before training camp is over and NOT before I'm good and ready to crawl out of the hole in the ground I'll be spending no less than 10 days in. It's called the somatic approach. Do some research and open your eyes. Plus, training camp is for underdeveloped athletes trying to prove their worth, something I don't need to do.

Happy holidays!
