

Season's Greetings

FROM THE HUXLEY-BURTONS

The new year ushered in countless blessings. Grandma Huxley is back home in Cleveland and we celebrated with corned beef from Slyman's. She loves her corner unit at Maple Lawn Active Living. She traded in her Grand Marquis for a golf cart and we can all breathe a sigh of relief. Brian and I marked 13 years of commitment to one another, while Braxton has decided to make a commitment of another sort, and that's to half the student body of Penn State. She and Patrick came home with Tyler and Amelia and made the announcement that they are now polyamorous. Something about the love they have to give being too great for just one other person--and to think that at one point I thought she hated everyone with all the black eyeliner she wore in high school. Back in my day they just called that a love commune. Byron celebrated 1,000+ subscribers to his YouTube channel in 2019. He's very diligent about adding new content with a Fortnite video upload every Friday and an Overwatch video every Tuesday--except for the week when he took down all his videos and replaced them with with a 10 second video of a black screen to protest school shootings. He really is our social media influencer. We remodeled our basement in the spring and it was quite the undertaking. Brian finally got his bar and we even added a little entertainment nook--perfect for hosting poker nights, dart tournaments, and his annual fantasy football draft party...and I got my craft room! I created these envelopes myself and I've been making resin pendant necklaces to sell on my etsy shop, check out my shop at etsy.com/proudpeonymamma. This summer we soaked up the sun in Puerto Vallarta, Mexico. We all had a wonderful time, white sand and beautiful beaches. We spent time eating and shopping on the boardwalk, whale watching, and relaxing on the beach. Byron got a pretty nasty sunburn on the back of his neck--I TOLD him to put the phone down. 2019 marked Brian's fourth year as the assistant coach of the Norwood High School's girls varsity volleyball team. They were 6 - 9 this season after starting 0 - 5, much of that due to the loss of Sheila, his star outside hitter who just welcomed a beautiful baby boy into the world. Brian's hoping to build on this year to make it to state next year. Go Indians! I made good on my resolution to run for office in 2019 and I'm happy to announce that not only did I keep that resolution, but you're looking the PRESIDENT of the Pleasant Ridge Garden Club. Hashtag ProudPeonyMomma.

Happy Holidays to you and all your loved ones from the Burton-Huxleys. Go Browns!
